

REFERENCES CITED

- Brady, G. S. and Clauser, H. R., 1977, Materials Handbook, 11th Edition: McGraw-Hill Book Co., NY, 773 p.
- Broadhurst, S. D., 1949, A general survey of some high-silica minerals in North Carolina: North Carolina Geological Survey: Information Circular 7, 34 pages.
- Burt, E. R., III, 1981, Geologic map of Region H, North Carolina Geological Survey, Open-file report 81-4, scale 1:250,000.
- Cabe, S. E., Nickerson, J. G., Hoffman, C. W., and Farrell, K. M., 1992, Cretaceous and Tertiary stratigraphy of the northern Sandhills area, in Dennison, J. M., and Stewart, K. G., editors, Geologic field guides to North Carolina and vicinity, Chapel Hill, North Carolina, Department of Geology, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Geologic Guidebook No. 1, p. 177-188.
- Chem-Nuclear Systems, Inc., 1993, Site Characterization Report, Section 2.7.1, Mineral Resources, Raleigh, North Carolina, 48 pages, plus appendices.
- Harben, P. W., 1999, Silica and Quartz in The Industrial Minerals HandyBook, 3rd Edition: Industrial Minerals Information Ltd., Surrey, UK, p.183-190.
- Mensah-Biney, Robert, Carpenter, Leigh Ann, Allen, Benjamin J., Miller, J. William, and Reid, Jeffrey C., 2001, Glass sand potential or the Pinehurst Formation, Richmond County, North Carolina: Mineral identification and processing, Abstract, 50th Annual meeting and abstracts – Raleigh, North Carolina, Southeastern Section, Geological Society of America, v. 33, Number 2, page A-2.
- North Carolina Geological Survey, 1985, Geologic Map of North Carolina, scale 1:500,000, in color.
- North Carolina Geological Survey, 1988, Preliminary Explanatory Text for the 1985 Geologic Map of North Carolina, Contract Report 88-1.
- Owens, J.P., 1989, Geologic map of the Cape Fear region, Florence 1° x 2° quadrangle and northern half of the Georgetown 1° x 2° quadrangles, North Carolina and South Carolina, U.S. Geological Survey, Miscellaneous Investigations Series, Map I-1948-B, scale 1:250,000.
- Wiener, Leonard S., Merschat, Carl E., and Tanner, James T., Jr., 1990, High-silica resource potential of the Upper Chilhowee Quartzite, McDowell County, North Carolina: North Carolina Geological Survey, Information Circular 26, 22 p.